OBJECTIVES OF THE STUDY:

A. GENERAL:

To determine the effects of pornographic film on the sexuality of selected female psychology students of the De La Salle University-Aguinaldo SY 1995-1996.

B. SPECIFIC:

1. To determine whether a pornographic film affects the cognitive aspect of female towards sexuality or not.

2. To establish if a pornographic film affects the affective aspect of female towards sexuality.

3. To know if a pornographic film affects the behavior of female towards sexuality.

SCOPE AND COVERAGE:

Questionnaire was constructed and distributed to 40 selected senior female psychology students of the De La Salle University-Aguinaldo SY 1995-1996. For data gathering, the instruments answered were checked, handscored and analyzed using t-test.

METHODOLOGY:

The study utilized an experimental design called Post-test Only Control Group Design in order to obtain concrete results.

MAJOR FINDINGS:

Based on the gathered data, the researchers found out that a significant majority of the selected senior female psychology students of the De La Salle University-Aguinaldo SY 1995-1996 were affected by pornographic film, as suggested by the mean difference of 4.8 and t-ratio of 2.2. However, the effects did not influence or affect the affective and cognitive aspects of their sexuality.

CONCLUSION:

Based on the findings the researchers therefore, concluded that pornographic film had significant effect on the behavior of females. However, there was no significant effect on the affective and cognitive aspects of sexuality.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. Parental guidance is highly recommended in viewing different kinds of films, especially films concerning sexuality.

2. Laws on pornographic films should be religiously enforced to best serve its purpose.

3. Pornographic films are recommended to married couples for innovation in their sexual marital technique.

4. Further studies be conducted relating to the same variables with a much larger group of respondents.
