The study was conducted to know the perception the selected police investigators in PNP Dasmariñas Police station. It gave emphasis on how language barrier affects the above mentioned issue. For confidentiality purposes, the participant's true identities were protected by using labels as: Participant no.1, Participant no.2, Participant no.3 so forth and so on.

The researchers employed qualitative method of research; therefore, they resorted to conducting interview in order to gather their needed data. They first sought for the approval of the Dean of the College of Criminal Justice Education and of the Chief Investigator of PNP Dasmariñas Police Station if they could conduct their research unto the said institution. Upon approval, the researchers formulated guide question and then sought for their validation by sending them to a validator. Upon approval of the validator, the validated questionnaires were then distributed to the respondents.

This study discussed the perception of the participants regarding language barrier in relation with police report writing. It presented how the issue affects the participants, be it in a positive or negative manner. Basing on the results, the participants presented well-asserted and balanced responses towards the questions which aimed to establish their view of the issue.

Most of the respondents agreed that police report writing is a quite challenging job that affects their work efficiency.

The researchers after concluding their study also presented several recommendations. Recommendations included reformation of ideas both for the government who formulates all the policies and the society who either benefits or suffers from whatever the government might formulate.
